GOLD HELPING SILVER

The steady and large increase in the world's production of gold is having an appreciable effect upon the value of silver. This is something that has escaped the attention of our political economists. The price of silver has made a remarkable advance during the last twelve months, but the advance is not altogether due to coinage requirements in this country or elsewhere. One cause of the advance is that gold is being produced, proportionately, in greater quantity than is silver, and the more gold there is produced the higher will the price of silver go.

The value of any staple commodity is determined by the abundance or scarcity of such commodity—there being a standard by which its value is determined. In the case of silver its value is determined by gold—the world's standard of value. If the production of gold increase in a ratio greater than the production of silver it is self evident truth that the price of the scarcer metal will advance. In other words and to illustrate: If gold production increases within a given period 150 per cent, and silver production increases during the same period only 25 per cent it is clear that the purchasing power of silver will become greater. Such are the conditions that prevail, and that have prevailed during the last fifteen years. That the production of silver might be increased or that the annual supply of gold may fall off are possibilities that we are not here concerned with; we are dealing with things as they are and not as they might be or become. Let us take figures of gold and silver production in 1890 and compare them with those of 1904, they will diagram what we are endeavoring to make clear:

In 1890 the world's production of gold was 6,591,460 ounces; in 1904 it was 16,793,419 ounces an increase during the fifteen years of 154.56 per cent.

In 1890 the world's silver production of gold was 134,404,104 ounces; in 1904 it was 168,493,538 ounces an increase during the fifteen years of 25.13 per cent.

As seen, the percentage of gold increase during the last fifteen years has been six times greater than silver's increase.

At the same ratio in increases were maintained during the next fifteen years, or for even a shorter period, it is easy to conceive that what is meant in the expression "16 to 1" will be fully realized.—Los Angeles Mining Review.

The tax rate of Douglas county has been fixed at $2.25 on the hundred dollars.
